And the file is not created, so there is no license file. Please fix this. A: I found the problem. I accidentally deleted the file and created it again with the exact same name. Hopefully this helps someone else. Please don't reprint – NCLD, IDTF Partner Sadly the LinkedIn comment spam is very much alive and well. In the name of the internet, we've got the solution for you: please don't reprint any article or image you find in the comments section. The "blog" format, despite its considerable benefits for new-media publishing and editorial fora, is conducive to an endless stream of blogspam, created for the sole purpose of posting LinkedIn comments in order to get your friends to click on the link. If, however, the comment section includes an article, and if you're not using the commenting feature to simply post a couple of thoughts, then please don't post a link to the comment. I'm told that the same applies to Facebook, and I imagine the same holds true for any other social network. Of course you can always tweet the comments — that's what Twitter is for. So, here's the truth: If I post a comment here and, based on the "promotion" being made on Twitter and/or Facebook, I am (unwittingly) promoting myself as well, then someone wants to go to the effort of reposting, and that comment will
