The La Paz Department of Health (Departamento de Salud La Paz) has reported that five indigenous Bolivians have died of suspected yellow fever over the past week in Santa Cruz de la Sierra, Chaco, Santa Cruz and Potosí. The La Paz Department of Health (Departamento de Salud La Paz) has reported that five indigenous Bolivians have died of suspected yellow fever over the past week in Santa Cruz de la Sierra, Chaco, Santa Cruz and Potosí. The Bolivian government declared a state of emergency and ordered the suspension of all public transportation, in order to prevent the spread of the disease. Authorities are currently providing protection to all new arrivals who came from other countries. The Bolivian government requested a help from the United Nations and the World Health Organization (WHO) to control the spread of the disease. La Paz Department of Health Director Nelson Pizarro said that five Bolivians have died of yellow fever, with the cause pending autopsy results. The five who died, four of whom are indigenous, were Bolivians who arrived to the city of Santa Cruz de la Sierra with small aircraft from the provinces of Santa Cruz de la Sierra, Chaco and Potosí. In addition, a few Bolivians are receiving medical treatment at the health centers of Santa Cruz de la Sierra and Chaco. During the emergency, La Paz Department of Health has deployed a total of 70 health personnel, along with 300 decontamination kits and 10 helicopters with decontamination equipment to quarantine areas where the virus is considered to have spread. The decontamination kits were 2d92ce491b
