public class MyContextInitializer: CreateDatabaseIfNotExists { protected override void Seed(MyContext context) { base.Seed(context); ... } }

Basically you need to have: a class that inherits from CreateDatabaseIfNotExists a method named Seed which accepts a context and call base.Seed(context). You can call this method in OnModelCreating and/or in the Startup.
