It was ranked #4th in the world in 2009 in container volume, ahead of most of the other world's ports. The port is located in the county of Los Angeles, California, United States. The port consists of two main districts: Port of Los Angeles and Port of Long Beach. History The Port of Los Angeles was originally designed as a small whaling harbor, named the "New Harbor." It was chartered in 1845 by the Republic of Mexico, when it was called San Pedro de Monterey. It was later rechartered by the United States and renamed Los Angeles Harbor. In 1854, the U.S. Congress transferred the harbor to the City of Los Angeles, with the condition that all whaling operations cease by 1854. This was done because the city had just been incorporated and needed to annex land to the west for its new city limits. The Los Angeles Union Stockyard, also transferred to the city at this time, was also operated as a whaling port. In that year, the harbor was renamed the Port of Los Angeles. In the late 19th century, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers became involved in the operation of the harbor. By 1889, the Corps had constructed the first breakwater and a dredge had been placed in the harbor to deepen it. In 1900, the Los Angeles & San Pedro Steam Navigation Company built a railroad line through the city to connect the port with the Southern Pacific Railroad. At the same time, the Port of San Pedro, which was operated by the Los Angeles & San Pedro Railroad, was constructed. In 1908, the railroad's name was changed to the Los Angeles Railway, which is still in operation today. In the late 19th century, the City of
