This article is from the archive of our partner. One of the more exciting parts of deploying a full-scale operation like the Benghazi consulate raid has to be the "spy games" that all involved play in the ensuing interplay between White House talking points, the intelligence community, and the CIA. But the latest game in that mix is getting more attention than usual because it exposes the Obama administration's double standard about national security threats. Which leads some to wonder if the Obama administration has been thrown off balance by the heightened pressure on the Hill to tighten immigration laws. You see, the Obama administration has successfully argued that there is nothing "inconsistent" between having a border patrol official (Daniel Hirsch) rather than a consulate employee acting as the immigration enforcement point of contact at the compound -- as was the case in Benghazi. But then White House spokesman Jay Carney himself put that argument into question when he seemingly cast doubt on the administration's assertion that the assault on the embassy was a spontaneous demonstration (citing an Obama appearance in 2010) -- even though Hirsch was at the "spontaneous demonstration" compound immediately following the attack. And did the administration misquote Sen. Lindsey Graham's assertion that the administration initially talked about it as a "spontaneous demonstration" when it had talking points? Yes, it did. So you'd think that maybe the Obama administration would figure out a way to squelch these defenses of the administration's more transparent version of events, by proving that it was actually Hirsch's role to continue to report the assault to various security clearances. But instead the administration has set up Hirsch to duck and dodge questions about both his role and the veracity of the administration's claims. This past weekend, ABC News ran a story detailing how Hirsch, a Border Patrol agent, was on his way to a meeting in Alabama when he was asked to rush back to the capital to testify before Congress.

Q: Bash unzip on Mac takes too long To avoid zip archives containing more than one.dat file, I only want to unzip two.dat files from an archive. I'm using the following command on Mac OS X: `unzip -T -v file1.dat file2.dat zipfile.zip` Works like a charm (that is to say it stops after unzipping one.dat file). But the command seems to be very slow. How can I make it faster? A:

What's New In Photoshop Cs5 32 Bit Download?

Q: Get rid of "Package not available" and other errors after upgrading to 11.10 I just upgraded to 11.10 and now I can't run any of my apps. For instance, my terminal gives me this: Package not available, but already installed If I try to open any installed app it says it can't find the package. Does anyone know how I can fix this? A: First, restore the files for the app (they are usually located in /usr/share/applications). Then, either Create a.desktop file for it and drag it into /usr/share/applications, or Rename the.desktop file that is for the app and place it in ~/.local/share/applications You can also launch the application from the command line to see what is wrong (type in the terminal the application path minus the.desktop file extension). To have more information about the error, type the following in a terminal: apport --help /* * Copyright (c) 1999, 2011, Oracle and/or its affiliates.
