A highly sensitive calcein-AM assay for cytotoxic agents used in cancer treatment. A novel assay procedure for rapidly estimating the concentrations of cytotoxic agents in plasma has been developed. The assay involves the use of a highly fluorescent dye, calcein-acetoxymethyl ester (calcein-AM), for directly measuring the cytotoxic activity of drugs in plasma without the need for cytotoxic agents to be radioactive. The assay measures both unbound (free) and bound fractions of calcein-AM (total calcein-AM) in 1 ml of blood and allows a highly sensitive determination of the concentration of cytotoxic agents in the lower nanomolar range. The procedure involves the incubation of cells with 4-(2-(5-(4,6-bis(chloromethyl)amino)pyridyl)ethylamino)-1,3-di-4-iodofenilide (CAM) for 1 h at 37 degrees C. The supernatant (bound) is removed and the cells are washed twice with PBS and then once with PBS/1% albumin and the fluorescence (which is equivalent to total calcein-AM) is measured. The binding of calcein-AM is temperature-dependent and at 37 degrees C, within 1 h, 99% of bound calcein-AM is hydrolyzed (decrease in fluorescence). Concentration-response curves using cells pre-exposed to various concentrations of cytotoxic agents are linear from approximately 0.1 nM to 100 microM. The procedure has been used to detect a number of different types of cell-bound cytotoxic agents, including the camptothecins topotecan and CPT-11, the thiol alkylating agent L-MPA, the anthracycline daunorubicin, the bis-diaryl system doxorubicin, and the 5-fluorouracil analogue 5-fluorouridine. The potential of the assay for
