Application of Mn-doped titania in polymeric membrane for molecular sensing in water. Manganese (Mn)-doped titania (Mn:TiO<sub>2</sub>) nanoparticles were synthesized using a coprecipitation method. Based on the Mn-doped titania particles, a polymeric membrane was prepared by phase separation of a perfluorinated copolymer (trade name: ECONYL N and NAGARAM; ECC), in which the molecular structure was modified with diblock copolymers made of poly(oligo-oxyethylene-methyl methacrylate) (PMEOx-based) and poly(glycerol methacrylate) (PGMA). The molecular porous structure of the membrane was confirmed by scanning electron microscopy (SEM) images. The optical property of the membrane was investigated, and the change of optical property under external stimuli was studied using ultraviolet-visible (UV-vis) spectroscopy. Especially, polyelectrolyte complex (PEC) formation was confirmed using a square-wave voltammetry (SWV) method. Based on the membrane properties of water permeability and PEC formation, a molecular sensing system was constructed in aqueous media. As a result, sensing of dopamine (DOPA) was confirmed by observing colorimetric change of the membrane under the pressure of a DOPA solution.
